

The proposal of separating the Petriclave Exclave, hereby referred to as Tortugán further in the document, stems from the inactivity of the former Petrichor state in the region. Recognizing that this is not out of contempt or any other motive and is simply a product of Petrichor as a whole rescinding into inactivity, I believe that my development of the exclave as opposed to the near silence from Petrichor (now part of Bloom) is justification to become separate.

The territories of the proposed State of Tortugán consists of the current southern exclave of Bloomian Petrichor. The majority of activity within the proposed state occurs only on the exclave, yet because of the isolated nature of the state, required external resources to operate such as assistance from senator actions, journeys to and from the City of Icenia for use of their factories, and extensive support from city dwellers in order to use the ore exchange.

I would also like to emphasize the scale of infrastructure in the exclave, which may or may not be apparent from the skyline since from there it looks like a quaint little town, which for the most part it is.

However, inside there are several factories including:

- A basic smelter
- A gold forge
- A charcoal maker
- A rail factory
- An iron forge
- An ore smelter encased within an underground IRO bunker
- and A public Carpentry Factory and Compactor

This of course is not ignoring the contributions of senators and the necessity to use Icenian Factories to acquire the materials for said factories, but considering all there is here, we are leaning off the reliance on foreign factories significantly.

In conclusion this document proposes the creation of the State of Tortugán, with the territories outlined previously in the document, with Logonts (me) as governor and founder.
